Town

Labuan Bajo is a fishing town located at the western end of the large island of Flores in the Nusa Tenggara region of East Indonesia. It is the capital of the WestManggarai Regency (Kabupaten Manggarai Barat), one of the eight regencies which are the major administrative divisions of Flores.

On the westernmost tip of the Island of Flores, the town of Labuan Bajo, or also spelled Labuhan Bajo, sits peacefully with many wonders waiting for you to explore. Labuan Bajo was only a small fishing site that today has flourished to become the gateway to many exotic destinations in East Nusa Tenggara.

The extraordinary interest of travelers to the existence of the Komodo dragons which are locally called 'ora' is a valuable alluring factor that is amplified by its superb national park.

The Komodo National Park was listed as UNESCO's World Heritage Site in 1991. It is home to fascinating wildlife, both on land and underwater. The park consists of Komodo Island, Rinca Island, Padar Island and numerous smaller islands around them.

Labuan Bajo is known as the city of sunset. You can find plenty of vantage points to enjoy at every end of the day with a spectacular sky. There are some interesting destinations that you can discover inside the city.

What to do?

Enjoy beautiful sceneries.
Experience exciting activities.

The Indonesian island of Flores used to get by on Bali's overflow alone, and the trickle of travellers that landed on the sleepy west coast town of Labuan Bajo often used it as a spring board to the epic Komodo National Park (www.komodonationalpark.org), then quickly left. But Labuan Bajo is sleepy no more. That trickle has become a river, and the island named 'Flowers' by 16th-century Portuguese colonists who were astonished by its lush, fragrant forests, is on the verge of becoming Indonesia's next big eco-travel hotspot.

It makes sense. After all, Flores has the kind of gorgeous that grabs hold of you tightly. It has empty white sand beaches and bay islands, excellent diving and snorkelling spots and a skyline with silhouettes of perfectly shaped volcanoes. The 700km trans-Flores highway that connects the east and west coasts skirts knife-edge ridges that sheer into spectacular river canyons, brushed by traditional villages and leads to multi-hued volcanic lakes. For years this tropical jewel box remained a secret, its gems accessible only to those willing to venture off the beaten track. But thanks to a steadily improving infrastructure and a maturing tourism industry, Flores is blooming like never before. Most visitors hire a car with a driver and take it all in on a long and slow, road trip, making sure to linger, before or after being among the national park's Komodo dragons.

Tucked into the country's west coast, Labuan Bajo is a romantic ramshackle bay harbour town that is not so little anymore. In the past three years, the harbour has doubled in size and the population has exploded. These days, visitors from all over the world check into sweet and homey guesthouses etched into the rugged hills – or one of the new tower hotels down the coast – to take in the surrealist sunsets and book a passage to the national park. Meanwhile, hundreds of young Flores locals are drawn to Labuan Bajo for work, which lends a lively boomtown bustle.

Raw Wildlife

The Tale of 'Ora' Komodo Dragons

Komodo dragons are gargantuan swaggering beasts that live on two rugged islands in the national park Komodo and Rinca. In 2014, the rare beasts were also found to be living in Mbeliling Forest on Flores. These prehistoric giants grow to more than three meters long and weigh up to 100kg. You can charter a local boat from Labuan Bajo for two or three day cruises in park waters, snorkel over pristine reefs, lounge on pink sand beaches and hike on Rinca and Komodo (one and a half and three hours by boat from Labuan Bajo respectively).

Padar Island - Komodo Dragons' Nest

The Indonesian island of Padar is about 20 miles (30 km) from Labuan Bajo, a fishing town on the westernmost part of Flores. Padar is small, but it is the third largest island of Komodo National Park, and was once a stomping ground for the immense dragons that gave the reserve its name.

Padar is mostly savannah-covered, with a surreal landscape fringed by bright green-capped mountains of fairy-tale shapes. It's all surrounded by three turquoise bays, and curiously, each one of the bays' beaches has different coloured sand: One is pearly white, another charcoal black, and a third is a very rare baby pink. It is a rare combination, a quirk of this unique island.
