KOH YAO TIDES

Thailand's Andaman Sea surrounds Phuket & fills Phang Nga Bay. Tides change twice a day at 12 hour intervals. The sea level rises & falls under the influence of the gravitational pull of both the moon & sun, with the time of the tides varying each day. During the "spring" tides, the days around the new & full moon, the sea level varies from 2.5 to 3.0 meters, but during the "neap" tides (the lowest level of high tide) the sea level varies only 0.8 to 1.0 meters. An extreme low tide can be clearly seen when the coral reefs in front of the beaches of Koh Yao Noi become exposed.

The resort provides information on tide times, & moon phases on a nightly newsletter, so you can best understand the natural cycles during your stay. Alternatively you may wish to visit: Tide Tables: <http://www.tide-forecast.com/locations/Phuket/tides/latest>

SWIMMING IN THE SEA ON THE ISLANDS OF KOH YAO

During high tide, swimming in the sea at Paradise is a refreshing pleasure. Experience the warm, tropical waters of Phang Nga Bay, where the water is protected from the large waves & currents of an open ocean. For further exploration, taking a kayak from the resort allows you to check out the nearby towering limestone formations, lagoons & beaches.

At low tides, swimming at any of the beaches on the island itself is limited due to the unique fringe of coral reef. Fortunately, Paradise Koh Yao is surrounded by beautiful, pristine islands & deserted beaches, which can be reached via long tail boat for swimming & snorkeling during low tide, or there is always our salt-water infinity pool.

DISCOVER MARINE LIFE

As the tide drops & exposes the coral reef, a variety of marine life becomes visible. Have a look at the lively animals such as mussels, shells, different species of crabs, & much more. Sometimes you will spot local fishermen searching for mussels & crabs, as they earn a
