Additional Information about Thai weddings

Hae Khaan Maak (Long Drum Procession)

In accordance with Thai tradition, early in the morning on the wedding day, a group of friends and relatives, traditionally called “Hae”, will meet at the groom’s house ready for a party. Together they walk to the bride’s home in a parade with dancing and long drums. This ceremony means that family and relatives agree to the wedding and now bring the groom to the bride’s house (in this case, the bride’s room) in order to celebrate the future couple. This is how weddings are celebrated in Thai villages, where the whole community joins together to mark the occasion. They carry food and fruits, artistically arranged on trays. Four married women carry three special trays covered with clothes in different colours. These three gifts are for the first, second and third night after being married. The crowd escorting the groom will stop in front of the bride’s house and will not let the groom enter before he has paid a suitable amount of money. In the hotel, our staff will act as the family. The whole party will then proceed to the location of the ceremony, which has already been set up.

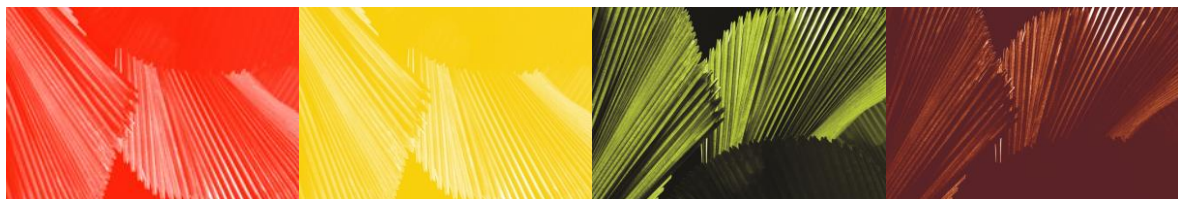

The Monk Ceremony

According to tradition, the religious wedding ceremony is often held at home. Monks are brought to the bride's house where the ceremony will take place. The bride and groom kneel on the floor in front of the monks. The key steps in the ceremony are outlined below:

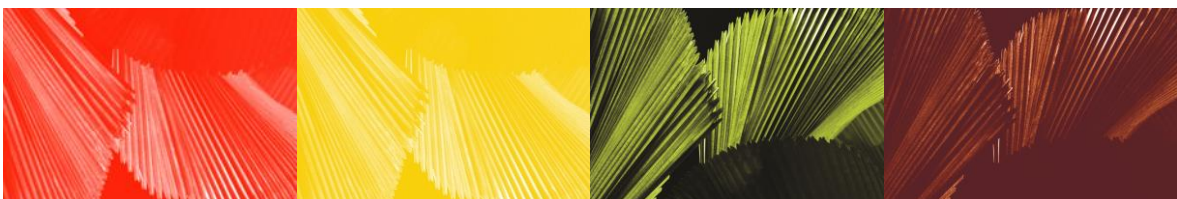

- The bride and groom together light two candles and three incense sticks.
- The monks start the ceremony, which consists of prayers and chanting. After which, the couple bows once to pay homage to Lord Buddha and the Buddhist teachings.
- A length of twine is then passed from the Lord Buddha statue through the monk's hands and over the shoulders of the couple. This signifies the blessing of Buddha to the couple. The ceremony lasts for around 45 minutes.

Rod Nam Sang (Holy water pouring ceremony)

The bride and groom sit close together. Garlands are placed around their necks and two circles of connected twine are placed on their heads. Starting with the senior members of the family, each person in turn approaches the couple, declaring a blessing for lifelong happiness as they pour water on the couple's hands from a conch shell called "Sang". Small ornamented silver bowls, called "Khan" are placed on small pedestals to collect the water poured over the hands of the newlyweds. These bowls are filled with the petals of the lotus (the blossom of fertility) and other flowers in elaborate patterns to symbolise a happy union. After all the guests have blessed the couple, the water from the bowls will be poured into the garden.
